Have you ever wondered why certain people always say they are lucky? Some scientists say the secret of being born lucky is a summer birthday. May babies are the most likely to enjoy a lifetime of good fortune, a study of 40,000 people has found. The time of year you are born has a lasting influence on optimism and whether people think they are lucky, British and Swedish scientists said.

May is the luckiest month to be born in, with half of those born then considering themselves lucky. October is the least lucky month with only 43 per cent claiming good fortune.

The study adds to evidence that luck is not all down to chance, but has something to do with a person's attitude. Another research has shown that whether people think themselves lucky depends more on having a "glass half-full" (not "half-empty") approach to life, than on success.

Professor Richard Wiseman, who led the study, said, "Something is influencing how people feel about their luck. People create their own luck through their attitude towards life." "Luck is a psychological phenomenon and not a matter of blind chance. One theory is that the temperature at the time of birth might have an effect on the development of the brain," he said. "People born in winter are more likely to suffer from depression." He said another possible reason is that mothers may be in a bad mood during winter, which affects their babies.

The researchers said their findings were based on statistics only, and would not be true for everyone.
