五、閱讀測驗：(10%，每題2分)

In the United States, 30 percent of the grown-up population has a “weight” problem. To many people, the cause is clear: they eat too much. But experiments do little to support this idea. Going back to the America of 1910, we find that people were thinner than today, yet they ate more food. In those days people worked harder physically, walked more, used machines much less, and didn’t watch television.

Several modern studies, besides, have shown that fatter people do not eat more on average than thinner people. In fact, some research work, such as 1970 study of 3545 London Office workers, reports that fat people eat less than thinner people on the average.

Studies show that thin people are more active than fat people. A study by the research group of School of Medicine at Stanford University found the following interesting facts. The more a man ran, the greater body fat he lost. The more he ran, the greater he needed for food. Thus, those who ran the most, yet lost the greater amount of body fat.

51. What kind of physical problem do many grown-up Americans have?
(A) They are too thin. (B) They work too hard
(C) They lose too much body fat. (D) They gain too much weight.
