(B.) On 23 June 2016, UK adults made a historic 31. They voted in favor of leaving European Union (EU), which is called Brexit, made up of the words 'Britain' and 'exit'. The EU was set up after World War II with the idea that if countries work together, they are 32 to go to war again. Members in EU have to pay billions of membership fees annually. But in contrast, they can share a “single market,” 33 that people and goods can travel accross countries without visa and checking. Since then, no country has ever left the EU. So why did UK want to leave all of a sudden? It's because that people in UK feel that they have been losing control over their own affairs and laws. Also, the fees they expend do not seem to 34. However, UK will not officially leave EU until 29 March 2019 since the whole leaving process normally takes two years after Article 50 (布里斯本條約第 50 條) is put into practice. To successfully separate from each other, several deals 35 by UK's Prime Minister(首相) Theresa May and her party. Whether the Parliament(議會) will approve the latest deal? (B.) Angelfish, often found in the warm seas and coral reefs(珊瑚礁), are among the most brightly colored fish of the ocean. Brilliant colors and stripes form amazing patterns on their body. These patterns actually help the fish to hide from danger. At night, when these fish become inactive, their colors may become pale. Often, the young ones are differently colored than the adults. Some scientists believe that the color difference between the young and the old indicates their different social positions.

Another interesting fact about angelfish is that they have an occupation in the fish world. Most of them act as cleaners for other fish and pick dead tissue(身體組織) from their bodies. This is not their food, though. Their diet consists mainly of sponge and algae(藻類).

One particular kind of angelfish, the blackspot angelfish, has a special capability that allows it to change gender from female to male. However, the change is not made at random; it happens for a specific reason. Angelfish live in groups, and each group has one male fish, which is blue in color, and four female fish, which are yellow. The male angelfish is the strongest and largest member of the group. He is the one who leads and looks after the females. When the male dies, the group needs a new "security guard." This is when the largest female in the group begins to change in appearance. She begins to grow larger in size, and after a week, she starts changing color, from yellow to blue. Slowly, her behavior toward the other fish also changes. She begins behaving like a male. Two weeks later, black stripes appear on her body, indicating the gender change is complete. She is now completely male!

(adapted from 108 學測)

(C.) Can you tell if the news you are reading is true or fake? With easy access to the Internet, people receive mass amounts of information every day, and rumors spread like wildfire before they are confirmed. To deal with the problem of fake news, the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) is launching an educational program that aims to teach secondary students in the United Kingdom how to tell the differences between real and fake news.

BBC collaborated with the University of Salford on a year-long project to see how well British children between the ages of 9 and 14 could identify fake news. Their research showed that even though most of these students had heard about fake news before, many of them had trouble distinguishing between real and fake when it came to news stories. The program, which will launch in March this year, will include teaching from BBC journalists, and students both in schools and online will be taught how to distinguish the news they receive. They want to ensure that teenagers can be equipped with the knowledge to avoid being deceived by misinformation. Up to 1,000 schools will derive benefit from this program.

“There’s more information than ever before,” said James Harding, director of BBC News, “some of it is old news. Some of it is half truths. Some of it is just lies. And it’s harder than ever to tell what’s true and what’s not.” This new program intends to enable people to make better choices not only about the news they consume, but also in their lives.

(adapted from Sanmin Publisher, Theodore Pigott, special correspondent)
